This corporate-level sentiment and emotional analysis provides an empirically grounded evaluation of public perception surrounding the Nigerian Police Force (NPF). Based on customer and citizen commentary across digital communication channels, the brand is currently navigating a severe reputation crisis marked by acute structural distrust, juxtaposed against localized praise for public relations and elite operational units.

NET SENTIMENT SCORE	NEGATIVE FEEDBACK	POSITIVE FEEDBACK	DOMINANT EMOTION
-39.7	63.5%	23.8%	38.2%
Critical Level (NSS)	Dominant Outrage	PR & Leadership	Anger & Hostility

Key Executive Findings

- Severe Outrage & Extortion Friction: 63.5% of analyzed commentary reflects deep frustration regarding extrajudicial violence, extortion at checkpoints, forced bail payments, and officer impunity.
- Divergence Between Leadership and Field Operations: Positive sentiment (23.8%) is heavily concentrated around elite units (FID, STS, FCT Command) and strategic leadership (IGP Olatunji Disu, CP Sanusi), whereas negative sentiment is driven by general patrol and divisional officers.
- Urgent Call for Structural Modernization: Public demand is overwhelmingly oriented toward transparency tools—specifically body-worn cameras, strict enforcement of name tags, and digitized monitoring systems.

2. Statistical & Visual Brand Metrics

Quantitative classification of citizen commentary yields a granular mapping of sentiment distribution, emotional disposition, and target entity variations.

Hope & Optimism	11 Expressions	18.4%	Support for IGP Disu, CP Sanusi, praise for modern PR engagement

Non-Statistical & Qualitative Narrative Synthesis

From a qualitative brand perspective, the NPF brand suffers from a classic "Identity Paradox". The official institutional tagline—"Police is your friend"—is actively subverted in public discourse into "Police is our enemy" or "Apply police at your own risk". This shift stems from real or perceived experiences where interaction with patrol officers carries physical or financial risk.

Conversely, a narrative of Reconstructive Hope exists among citizens who praise structural PR improvements and digital engagement. Citizens demonstrate high analytical clarity: they distinguish between systemic institutional failures and competent leadership, repeatedly expressing that "if Nigerian police wants to work, they will work."

5. Executive Recommendations & Strategic Transformation Roadmap

To elevate the Nigerian Police Force brand past its current operational and reputational bottleneck, the executive leadership under the Inspector General of Police (IGP) must implement a 4-Pillar Action Plan focused on Transparency, Accountability, Welfare, and Community Engagement.
